Faces on the Battle Field. We read in All the Year Round :- " After the battle of Inkerman the faces of many of the desc still were a smyle, while others had a threatening expression. Some lay stretched on their backs. as if friendly hands had prepared them for hurtal Some were still resting on one knee, their hands grasping their muskets. In some instances cartridge romained between the teeth, or the plifted as though to ward off a blow or appeal ing to Heaven. The faces of all were pale as though cut in marble. As the wind swept across the battle-field it waved the bair, and gave the bodies such an appearance of life that a spectator could hardly help thinking they were about to rise to continue the fight Another surgeon describing the appearance of the corrses on the field of Magenta save that they furnish indubitable proof that man may cease to exist without having a two-storied detached Granite Godown. suffering the least pain. Those struck on the head generally lay with their faces on the ground their limbs retaining the position they were in at the instant they were struck, and most of those eill he'd their rifles, showing that when a ball entered the brain it causes such a contraction of the muscles that there is not time for the hand to lrose its hold of the weapon before death. Another peculiarity observed in the case of those who were wounded in the brain was the suddonness with which they died, even when sugrepted to be out of danger. During the hattle of Solfering, a ribeman was wounded on the head by half which passed though the skell and boried itself in the brain. His wound was dressed, and he was stretched on straw, with bis head resting on his knapsack, like his wounded comrades. He filled his pine and lav smaking it. Nevertheless out be ladered and discharged. before he had finished it death came upon him. and he was found lying in the same attitude with his rope still between his testle. He had never aftered a cry, or given any sign that he was suffering rain. In cases where the ball had entered the heart nearly the same appearances were presented as in the cases of those who had been struck in the brain! don'th was what we term instantaneous, but it was not quite so swift as in the former case; these was generally time for a movement in the aut of dring. The letomus of Panama. An interesting paper has been read before the members of the Leeds Philosophical Scalety, by commanding a view of the harbour with or wita-Capt. Pim, R. N., entitled "Some Account of our godowns. the New World Inthone " Capt, Plus stated the unifect of his fecture to be to point out how in- next timutely the progress and prosperity of this country were connected with the development of the great lathmus of Panama, and with its being converted into a highway of nations. In 1858 three American gentlemen entered into a forma contract with the Government of New Granada for the construction of a railway across the lathinus of Panama, and despite enormous obstacles it was completed and opened in January, 1855 The total length of the railway was 47 miles, and the cost 14 millions sterling, or nearly £32,000 re mile. Very few underfakings paid better than the Panama Hailway, the company not only p sees-ing a monopoly, but charging enormously for both passengers and freight the charge fo the former being 2s. 2d, per mile. The dividend this year had amounted to 60 per cent, and the moral he drew from this was that there was plenty of room for another line of transit, and that the sonmer it was opened the hetter. The man agement of the existing railway was entirel American. American interests to the injury three of this country, were the first consideration! and in the event of a war, our fleet in the Pacific could be destroyed with impunity long before the and at present in the occupation of Meesrs news would be allowed to find its way across the ELMENHORST and SANDER. is thrown to this country. This danger had pressed upon his mind, and led him to seek to impress upon the Government, In 1881, when there was a fear of hostilities breaking out, in consequence of the Trent affair, the Duke of I Wellington Street, poor to the Pram see of Newcastle stated that he had been unable to Mesers. As there was no present remedy, he was led to look for another route, and his explusand Gage Streets and of two bundred and twenty rations had satisfied him that the best route surnes | nine feet on Aberdeen Street, comprising a su Ocentral America was through Nicaragua. He described the topographical features of Nicaragua, its numulation, its rich and manifold productions, and its form of gov rament. During the six years he had spent there be had never heard of a rase of highway, robbery or murder. Horse signling and petty thefts occasionally occurred but, as a good sound thrashing was the punishment for studing, and as the authorities saw the blows well haid on in public with a good stick. thicking was pretty rare.
